THE TANKS

LOUNGE • BAR • CLUB FORSTER

In the 1890s, it was decided that a breakwall extending out to sea should be built along the Forster shore, so that the entrance to Wallis Lake could be navigable at all times.

In 1898, Richard Hungerford quarried rock from the northern side of Bennetts Head and constructed a steam-operated railway using two small locomotives. The railway ran for 2.4km along the coast, from Bennetts Head and behind Pilot Hill to the breakwall.

The line passed along the foreshore in front of the present Forster Primary School and through an area that became known as “The Tanks.” This name came from a collection of steel ship’s tanks mounted on a three-metre-high wooden stand, where steam engines were filled with water. A windmill beside the tanks powered a lift pump, which drew water from a nearby well into the tanks.
